

A Brief Dialogue on Happiness with Frank Iodice

By Dr. Giada Biasetti

On Wednesday, April 12th, Frank Iodice, an Italian freelance journalist and writer, came to Augusta University to talk about happiness. He delivered a strong message during his presentation sponsored by Alpha Mu Gamma, and students showed great interest in the subject. They were very involved and made significant contributions to the argument on what happiness means to them. Students soon realized that happiness is the only human passion that will never perish under the modern politics of hate and obsessive competition. They asked themselves how they would reach their objectives and understood that each one of us has a different definition of happiness. Three keywords related to happiness were mentioned during the presentation: passion, love, and enthusiasm. Happiness is easy to find; sometimes we just need the bravery to run after it and overcome our fear. His final message to students was on the importance of reading. According to Frank Iodice, reading is the only weapon we need to overcome the politics of hate and compulsive competition. For more information on Iodice's novels, a downloadable version of his Brief Dialogue on Happiness (available in English, Spanish, and Italian), and access to other articles, you can follow him on Facebook and read his blog at frankiodice.it.

A Brief Dialogue on Happiness with Frank Iodice

By Dr. Giada Biasetti

On Wednesday, April 12th, Frank Iodice, an Italian freelance journalist and writer, came to Augusta University to talk about happiness. He delivered a strong message during his presentation sponsored by Alpha Mu Gamma, and students showed great interest in the subject. They were very involved and made significant contributions to the argument on what happiness means to them. Students soon realized that happiness is the only human passion that will never perish under the modern politics of hate and obsessive competition. They asked themselves how they would reach their objectives and understood that each one of us has a different definition of happiness. Three keywords related to happiness were mentioned during the presentation: passion, love, and enthusiasm. Happiness is easy to find; sometimes we just need the bravery to run after it and overcome our fear. His final message to students was on the importance of reading. According to Frank Iodice, reading is the only weapon we need to overcome the politics of hate and compulsive competition. For more information on Iodice's novels, a downloadable version of his Brief Dialogue on Happiness (available in English, Spanish, and Italian), and access to other articles, you can follow him on Facebook and read his blog at frankiodice.it.

